

LER 590: Workforce Policies and Partnerships

Should an HR Director make a partnership with a local community college to train workers? Do job training programs work? Does the minimum wage reduce employment? This class focuses on the evaluation and analysis of key labor market policies, programs, and interventions. The class has two primary goals. The first is to introduce students to key debates and challenges in the U.S. labor market. The second is a practical goal: to inform students about the various institutions and dynamics that they will face when seeking to hire and train workers in their future HR positions. The class will take a multi-disciplinary approach to the topics it addresses; most of the readings will be drawn from the economics, sociology, and public policy literatures.

Each week there will be a short quiz on that week's readings. Students will also write a short paper analyzing a policy topic during the semester. At the end of the course, students will work in groups to present an assessment of a labor market program, partnership, or practice. Classroom participation is essential. A note on readings: although I often require only selected pages from a given text, this class involves a commitment to keep up with a significant volume of reading assignments.

Texts are available on Compass.
